

TEDDY ROOSEVELT, JR., CAUGHT FLIRTING, SAYS, "ALL MY FAULT"

Principal of Girls' Seminary Makes President's Gallant Son and a Companion Stand with Faces Turned to the Wall as Punishment for Their Awful Transgression.

ABINGDON, Va., April 14.—Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., flirts with the pretty misses of the Stonewall Jackson Seminary here and his subsequent elopement with one of the girls on whom he had been visited the wrath of Miss Hunt, the head of the seminary, has for days been the talk of this historic town.

Young Roosevelt came to Virginia to spend a few weeks on the place of his uncle, near White Top, and while there met a boy named Trigg, who is connected with one of the first families of the Old Dominion. Young Trigg invited Teddy, Jr., to go with him to his home in Abingdon, and the invitation was promptly accepted, as the President's son had read about the town in both Winston Churchill's story, "The Crossing," and John Fox's novel, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come."

But as this place is small and its points of interest easily exhausted, the boys found time hanging heavily upon their hands very soon after their arrival.

Girls Cast Sheep's Eyes. Abingdon is built at the base of a mountain and has one long street. As the boys strolled down this street toward the end of this thoroughfare they espied a large building situated in beautifully kept grounds surrounded by a brick wall topped with iron fence. "What place is that?" asked Teddy, Jr.

"It is the Stonewall Jackson Seminary," replied young Trigg. Just then they caught sight of several groups of young misses demurely conversing or reading books beneath the trees.

The girls saw the strollers at the same moment. Immediately there was a rustle of gowns and a murmur of girlish voices, and—

Elaborate disagree as to what followed. Some authorities claim that the girls knew that young Trigg was a fast and furious flirtation by climbing the brick wall and leaning over the iron fence, where he blew a kiss toward the beauty of Southern beauties and waved a cambric handkerchief.

The girls are sure as to what they had a lot of fun in certain, for the noise they made attracted the attention of the school's trustees, and she reported the matter to Miss Hunt.

An investigation was once begun. Miss Hunt announced that no guilty girl should escape, and that the flirting microbe was to be squelched right then and there.

At first all of the girls loudly denied that they had engaged in the frolic with Teddy Jr., but at last, when closely pressed, one of them admitted, that when the President's son had waved his hand at her she waved back.

It was such a naughty thing to do that Miss Hunt condemned the offender to one week's imprisonment in her room, except during the hours of study. The culprit was also denied dessert and sweets for that period.

Boys Stand in Corner. This stern sentence came to the ears of Teddy, Jr., and he was deeply grieved. He discussed many plans with young Trigg for rescuing the unfortunate girl from her sad and lonely fate. A few nights ago at a reception given in his honor at the Trigg home he met Miss Hunt.

He at once seized the opportunity to beg for the pardon of the girl in the seminary.

"It was all my fault," he said. "I will give you an opportunity to show the man that is in you."

She then promised to grant a full pardon to the girl if young Roosevelt and his companion would stand for a half hour with their faces to the wall in explanation of their sins. This was readily agreed upon. The next day the President's son, with young Trigg at his side, did penance and the hapless girl was set free.

Since then Teddy, Jr., has taken the place of the Chevalier Bayard in the estimation of the seminary girls.

L. R. CORSETS

The Most Shapely, Graceful, Best Made Corsets on the Market at Their Prices

THERE is one essential feature of the toilette that the well-dressed woman dare not slight. The figure, the carriage, the fit and shapeliness of the dress, all depend upon it. The Corset.

For this reason, women of discrimination who do not count the expenditure extravagance, pay from ten to twenty-five dollars for Lillian Corsets, in order to secure the most artistic styles that the foremost corsetier of Paris designs.

To meet the wishes of women who do not feel like paying the higher prices, we have produced the superb line of L. R. Corsets—patterned after the most shapely French corsets; made of best materials, finished in the best possible manner. They are superior to all other American-made corsets, and have most of the beauties and advantages of imported corsets, without their cost.

There are a dozen different models, to suit all figures. Price $1 to $5.50. Two popular models are here illustrated.
